

Aslacton Primary School - Newsletter Friday 6th May 2022

This week at Aslacton

Eagles have worked hard in maths to calculate the value of opposite angles and use angle knowledge to work out missing values. In English, we have read the Caribbean story 'The First Kingfisher', looking at story language, settings and emotions. In Science, we have learnt about the discoveries and achievements of Galileo Galilei and in Art, we have created a collage royal cushion for our jubilee posy project. Year 6 continue to work hard in SATs revision and will be brilliant in next week's assessments. Good luck Year 6 - I am very proud of you all! This week, Kestrels have written fantastic character descriptions about a beast from the story, Kai and The Monkey King. We have used conjunctions to extend our sentences and expanded noun phrases to make our descriptions detailed and exciting to read. In maths, we have compared and ordered unit fractions, and in our art lessons, we have practised painting watercolour flowers in preparation for designing a posy for the Queen! Owl class have been writing poems about our dream gardens and consolidating our understanding of number bonds to 10. We have also explored compass points in geography for giving and following directions.

Message from Mrs Haines

I hope you all enjoyed your Bank Holiday. With this week being only 4 days, it has been super busy. As part of our plans for celebrating the Queen's Jubilee. Sue our cook from Edwards and Blake, has designed a 'street party' style menu for the special day. Good weather pending, the children will have their lunch outside, in true British street style decked with bunting. I have been shown some very good writing by the children this week. The KS1 core story of The Snail and the Whale is inspiring the children to write. I was particularly impressed with the sequencing and descriptive vocabulary being used. Becoming a writer and the skills it takes should never be underestimated, and I took the opportunity to give high praise, stickers and Dojo points to our young writers. The weather looks promising over the weekend, I hope you can all get out and about. Take care.
